THE STORY OF THE TEAHOUSE

The Boulder Dushanbe Teahouse was given to Boulder by our sister city, Dushanbe, the capital of Tajikistan. A small country in Central Asia, Tajikistan sits along the trade routes of the famed Silk Road, and in 1987, when the gift was given, Tajikistan was part of the Soviet Empire. After being built in Tajikistan, the Teahouse was dismantled and sent to us here in Boulder, where it was rebuilt on this location in Central Park.

More than 40 artisans created the lavish artistic elements of the Teahouse which showcase the floral designs of the garden, repetition of pattern, and the Tree of Life. These skills were often passed down through the generations. These meticulously hand crafted elements, including the hand carved and painted ceiling, the plaster carved walls, and the external ceramic panels, give us a glimpse into the lavish Persian culture, rich with color, texture, and depth.

In Central Asia, teahouses serve as community gathering places where people meet to socialize, conduct business, and relax. Today, the Boulder Dushanbe Teahouse stands as a symbol of global friendship and cooperation, and offers the people of Boulder, as well as visitors from around the world, an oasis in which to soothe the senses, enjoy a cup of premium tea, or explore cuisines from around the world.
